outgrowth is a major
event during neural
development and is also characteristic of
mature neurons in
various brain regions.
The mechanisms that
control neurite
outgrowth remain to be elucidated. In this study, we investigated

the neurite outgrowth of retinal ganglion cells (RGCs), which are involved in the neuronal circuitry of the visual system. We used the mouse optic nerve cryograft model and found that RGC neurite outgrowth was weak, but increased in a time-dependent manner. Furthermore, we focused on the roles of four RGC-specific molecules, brain-specific angiogenesis inhibitor

and syntaxin 3,
because they might be
involved in RGC
neurite outgrowth in
the optic nerve

the Frizzled family;
Sdf1 is a CXC chem
